

“I’ve Been a Dream of God for All Eternity”

+ Before I formed you in the womb, I knew you...Jeremiah 1:5

I move now from the universal dust of the human race to the more intimate and personal dust of me as an individual.

*To be known even before I was conceived in the womb! How awesome!
“I have been a dream of God for all eternity!” This is the truth I will carry in my heart this day. This is the blessing God has given me this day!*

I do not know the circumstances of my conception. Human life is frail and no parents are perfect. I may have been conceived in a shining moment of tender love, or in a muddled moment with its share of less noble motivations. But what matters most is the certainty of divine love behind my conception rather than the quality of human love at my conception. Still, my meditation today must include the parents who gave me birth. I pray that I can forgive them any flaw they may have had at my conception. I cannot be born fully until I am able to forgive.

I live this day in joyful gratitude for the gift of life. I send out a prayer for my parents wherever they may be. I ask God’s peace will be with them.

Author of Life, you have known me for so long and now I am about to know you. You offer me as gift to my parents. I am willing to move into the unknown land of my life. Your voice keeps echoing in my small being, “Before I formed you in the womb I knew you.” You used the sacred moment of my conception to fulfill your Divine Design for my presence in this world. May all of life’s moments be sacred. Amen
