The Film: Catholic co-writers-directors Cary Solomon and Chuck Konzelman's supernatural thriller was inspired by the book A Nefarious Plot by New York Times best-selling author Steve Deace. A criminal awaiting execution gets a last-minute reprieve when a court order sends a psychiatrist to examine if he is trying to avoid the death penalty with his behavior. The doctor finds he is a demon who wants to be executed, leading to an edge-of-the-seat battle of good against evil. Both writers, known for Unplanned, a movie about pro-life advocate Abby Johnson, consider this their best work to date. Solomon said about the film, "Catholics have to go see the movie because we need to get a refresher course on the devil. We need to realize that the devil is real. If you really truly believe in the devil, you will change your life because you will suddenly realize: 'Somebody is after my soul. If I lose this battle, where do I go?' And the problem with most people is they're distracted. And that's the way the devil wants it."
